ONStor 'changes storage management for the better'

03 Dec 2007

ONStor can change companies' entire storage management systems for the better, it has been claimed.

US health insurance provider Consortium Health Plans recently implemented ONStor appliances in order to save both space and energy usage as part of a scheme to tackle its environmental impact.

Following the adoption of ONStor products, the insurer states that it has achieved a satisfactory level of flexibility, with benefits derived in a number of different ways.

Technology coordinator Marcliff Fountaine comments: "We can add another network-attached storage head for redundancy and we can grow storage independently through the addition of disk arrays of our choice."

He continues that power consumption and efficiency have also been positively impacted upon - while the virtualisation features of the new systems are likely to mean backup copies of Consortium's servers will be held for disaster recovery purposes.

ONStor also recently provided additional storage for e-commerce network Shopzilla as the shopping portal looked to cater for increased demand in the run-up to Christmas.
